

It's 22:00 hours and you've just settled into your new quarters aboard the fleet's newest starship. As you look out the window to the vast universe that you'll be exploring, the klaxons blare and the lights flash. Red Alert! ...Yesterday you were just the newest ensign and now you are looking forward to proving your mettle. You jump out of bed and slide into your crisp looking uniform, eager to see what new species or old enemy you will be encounter. Moments later, you arrive on the bridge... You look around and an instead of the doubtful glances from earlier there's not even a soft whisper of you being a newbie, so you take your post, with your heart thumping wildly because you don't know what the next hour may bring... ultimate in online role-playing events!

What is online role-playing event? It's called a simulation and for one hour every week you take on the role of an adventurer, explorer or any other character you imagine...as you work with your fellow crewmates to explore the boundless universe. Become an Engineer, Operations, Security, Medical or Science Officer. Explore like those who came before you, Kirk, Picard, Spock and so many others. Become part of the journey as you role-play your character during live simulations and through writing duty logs, personal logs or even joint logs with other crewmembers. One day a chance at commanding your own starship.

For more information about how you can explore the future, visit:

The Adventure Starts Here!